

The powerful GIRLS WRITERS

Sheila Armstrong is an Irish writer born in the northwest of Ireland.

She first became known for her short stories, such as How to Get a Fish, published in literary magazines.

She spent ten years in publishing and now works as a freelance editor ...

Her work has been translated into over ten languages!

Her writing is often described as poetic and sensitive

It is inspired by nature and its environment, and addresses themes such as

- loneliness
- human relationships
- deep emotions

Her work has been nominated for the Irish Book Awards, the Society of Author's Awards, the Kate O'Brien Award, the Edge Hill Prize, the RSL Ondaatje Prize, and the European Union Prize for Literature.

She is interested in everything from physics and technology to nature and landscapes. She writes about rural and urban communities, invisible boundaries, and transgressive experiences.

In 2019, Sheila took a year off her day job to focus on writing, and she hasn't stopped since.
